Lives and works in Seoul, Korea

Saerom Yoon is an artist based in Seoul, South Korea. His work is inspired by the effortless beauty of nature, particularly the colors of both sunset and sunrise. He wants his sculptural furniture to have a similar appearance and feel as a water color painting. Furthermore, he hopes to express natural textures in his work; such as the interplay of clouds, calm water, rippling waves, frozen ice and the bark of trees.

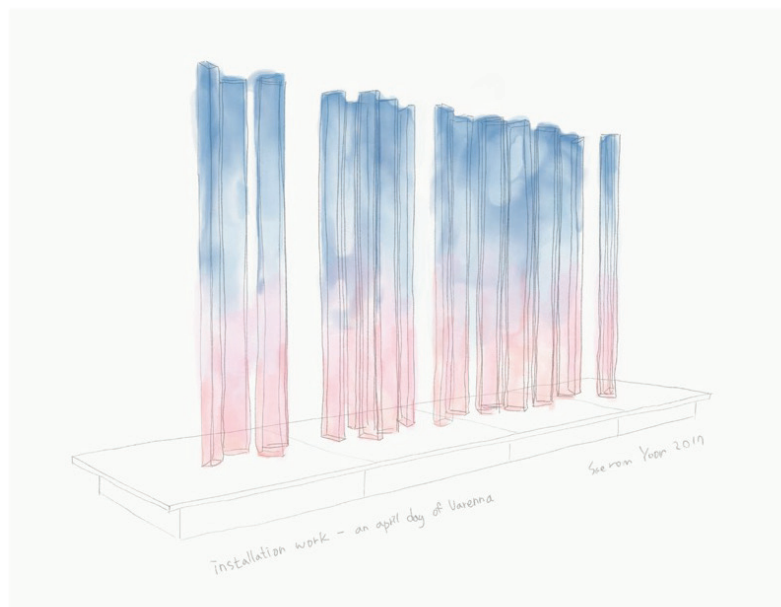

ARTIST'S NOTE

My oldest memory of childhood travels to the Philippines where I spent time with my parents. The green mountains, the emerald green ocean, and every scene of me playing on this small but beautiful island still reside in me. My favorite was the beach at sunset. The sunset would take away the scorching sun leaving only the fresh breeze behind. My family and I enjoyed looking at the sunset until the dark and it is the most precious memory of all.

This series [A Piece of One Day] and [Crystal Series] present the fragments of my youth memories, the emotions of looking at the afterglow on an exceptionally stunning day, and the moments of looking up at the sunlight and the leaves sparkling under the shade of hot summer sun.

By sharing this series, I wish to show the perspective to see nature as the space and time surrounding us along with my own experiences.

I intend to give the audience a strong visual impulse to share these experiences. With these extraordinary visual catalysts, I hope to share my memories with the audience, and the experience imprints in their hearts as a piece of one day.
